Ayutthaya’s monuments of serious concern: Foreign experts

AFTER FLOODS

The historic city of Ayutthaya, which was hit hard by the worst flooding in decades, has seen its international monuments and culture museums hit hard and forced to temporarily close.

The site, which is home to a vast number of historic temples and monuments, has been flooded by the Chao Phraya river, which has swollen due to heavy rains in the region.

“The flooding has caused significant damage to the site,” said a senior official from the Ayutthaya Provincial Administration Organization.

“The water level has reached a critical point, and the situation is likely to worsen in the coming days,” the official added.

The flooding has forced the closure of several historic sites, including the famous Wat Phra Kaew, which houses the Emerald Buddha, and the Royal Palace.

“Immediate actions are being taken to rescue the site and prevent further damage,” the official said.

The authorities have set up temporary shelters for tourists and residents who have been affected by the flooding.

“Everyone is being evacuated to safe places,” the official added.

The flooding has also affected the local economy, with many businesses forced to close due to the closure of the sites.

“Tourists have been badly hit, and many have had to cancel their trips,” said a local business owner.

The authorities have appealed to tourists to avoid visiting the site until further notice.

“We understand the financial impact this will have on local businesses, but the priority is to protect the site and ensure the safety of everyone,” the official said.

The flooding has also raised concerns about the future of the site, with some experts warning that if not properly managed, it could face irreversible damage.

“The water level is expected to rise further over the coming days, and it is crucial that we act quickly to prevent any further damage,” the official said.

The authorities have appealed to the international community for support in managing the flooding and protecting the site.

“We are doing everything we can to protect the site, but we need the support of the international community to prevent any further damage,” the official said.

The site is a UNESCO World Heritage site and is considered one of the most important cultural sites in Thailand.

“We are committed to protecting this site and ensuring its future,” the official added.

The authorities have also appealed to tourists to respect the site and avoid causing any damage.

“We are doing everything we can to prevent any damage, but it is crucial that everyone plays their part in protecting this site,” the official said.
